People Love Their Bubble Tea!

Summary.

The text describes the popularity and history behind bubble tea, a cold, sweet drink containing milk, tea, and small "bubbles" made from tapioca. This drink originated in Taiwan in the 1980s, where two tea houses, Chun Shui Tang and Hanlin Tea Room, claim to have been the first to add tapioca balls to their iced tea. Despite their dispute over who was the true inventor, bubble tea became very popular in Taiwan and spread throughout Asia, Europe and North America.

Making bubble tea involves boiling tapioca balls in water, cooling them, and then mixing them with milk and cold black or green tea, using a wide straw to enjoy the bubbles. Bubble tea shops offer a wide range of flavors, including fruits like strawberry, melon, and apple, and even options like jelly and cheese. Creativity in flavor combinations continues, allowing customers to try new varieties each time they visit a store.

The popularity of bubble tea has transcended borders, with fans around the world and new stores constantly opening. This text highlights how the drink has evolved from its humble origins in Taiwan to become a global phenomenon, helping readers try this delicious and versatile concoction if they get the chance.
